Bringing Connectivity to Your Community

State Celebrates National Digital Inclusion Week

Today marks the beginning of Digital Inclusion Week, an annual weeklong recognition and celebration to draw attention to the importance of digital equity and inclusion in communities nationwide.

The observance is organized by the National Digital Inclusion Alliance and its more than 1,800 affiliates. The weeklong celebration raises awareness and promotes action for digital equity solutions. New Mexico and communities across the country are highlighting their efforts online and in person.

“Digital inclusion is crucial in the broadband world,” said Drew Lovelace, acting director, NM Office of Broadband Access and Expansion (OBAE). “Affordability, access to devices, and digital skills training remain a challenge here in New Mexico, and our job is to help bridge that divide, particularly in rural areas. Broadband, online tools and digital literacy should be available to everyone.”

This year’s Digital Inclusion Week theme is “Stronger Together: Mobilizing Towards Sustainability,” highlighting the power of collaboration in ensuring the endurance of the digital equity movement. By fostering a robust digital inclusion ecosystem that connects initiatives across our communities, the movement toward long-term digital inclusion solutions can be sustained.

“This week is a vital platform to celebrate and amplify the community-driven initiatives that are breaking down digital barriers—one connection, one device, and one skill at a time,” said Lovelace.

OBAE invites advocates, policymakers, community leaders, educators, researchers, and others to come together this week-- and all year long--to advance digital equity across the state.

This year’s events are designed to help families and communities get the information technology capacity needed to participate and grow in our broadband society.
